The Honorable Russell Vought
Director
The Office of Management and Budget

Dear Secretary Rollins and Director Vought:

As the Administration develops its budget proposal for FY 2027, we respectfully urge you to protect crop insurance from harmful cuts that would undermine American farmers and ranchers and rural economies. Crop insurance is a farmer's first line of defense against natural disasters. As the challenges for America's farmers and ranchers continue to grow, we believe crop insurance as a safety net is only becoming more important to stability in rural America and to a secure domestic food supply. During this tumultuous time in the agricultural economy, one of the few certainties that farmers can rely on is the timely protection provided by the federal crop insurance policy purchased with their hard-earned dollars. Crop insurance indemnity payments may not be the only dollars directed to farmers and ranchers after a disaster, but the program always provides the first dollars, typically making payments within just 30 days.

As farmers enter 2026, many of them are coming off of three years of negative returns that have eroded their financial position. These challenging economic conditions are driven by low crop prices combined with high input costs. As a result, USDA and Congress have taken extraordinary ad hoc measures over the past few years to ensure the financial security of rural America. We appreciate this Administration's continued commitment to crop insurance and the assistance it provides to US farmers and ranchers. It would only serve to undercut these efforts to propose harmful changes to a crop insurance program that provides predictable, within-budget assistance to farmers in a way that helps lenders continue to support America's farmers and ranchers. Furthermore, it is the certainty of the crop insurance program that provides critical reassurance to lenders.

It is no accident that the most recent farm legislation has emphasized risk management, and in doing so, protected the interests of American taxpayers. Farmers spend as much as $6.8 billion per year of their own money to purchase insurance from the private sector. On average, farmers also must incur losses of almost 30 percent before their insurance coverage pays an indemnity. Crop insurance allows producers to customize their policies to their individual farm and financial needs and policies are based on fundamental market principles, which means higher risk areas and higher value crops pay higher premiums for insurance.

Given the challenges faced by rural America with elevated input prices and decreased farmgate prices, cuts to a program as critical as crop insurance should be avoided. Farmers, agribusinesses, lenders and lawmakers agree that crop insurance is a linchpin of the farm safety net and is crucial to the economic, food, and fiber security of both urban and rural America. We urge you to continue to support America's farmers and ranchers and oppose cuts to crop insurance during this year's budget process.

Crop insurance allows producers to customize their policies to their individual farm and financial needs and policies are based on fundamental market principles, which means higher risk areas and higher value crops pay higher premiums for insurance. Crop insurance and its links to conservation further ensure that the program is a good investment for taxpayers.

Given the challenges faced by rural America with elevated input prices and decreased farmgate prices, cuts to a program as critical as crop insurance should be avoided. Farmers, agribusinesses, lenders, and lawmakers agree that crop insurance is a linchpin of the farm safety net and is crucial to the economic, food, and fiber security of both urban and rural America. We urge you to continue to support America's farmers and ranchers and oppose cuts to crop insurance during this year's budget and appropriations processes.
